“Educators are often buried in the details of every busy day. I can help districts develop more strategic approaches that help protect them in the long run.”

Evelyn Howard-Hand has more than 30 years of experience in the field of special education and 25 years' experience in litigation. She has successfully represented school districts in all aspects of disability complaints as well as litigation from due process hearings to federal court appeals.

Evelyn offers her experience to help school administrators develop solid procedures and practices to successfully navigate Response to Intervention, Section 504, and the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) on both a day-to-day and long-term basis.

Evelyn began her career in teaching hearing impaired and multiply disabled students. Later, she attended the University of Texas Law School and also served on the Lake Travis ISD Board of Trustees.
