“There is no greater service to the community than providing children with a public education, and I feel very privileged to help our clients educate future generations.”

Meghan Beytebiere was raised in Missouri City, Texas, where she was educated in public schools. Growing up with a parent who was a public educator, Meghan is passionate about providing legal advice and guidance to school districts. She practices in the areas of general school law, special education, and litigation in the Houston office.

Prior to law school, Meghan attended St. Edward's University in Austin, Texas, where she obtained her Bachelor of Arts in Criminology and Psychology. Meghan earned her law degree from the University of Houston Law Center. While attending law school she served as a Student Teacher in the Street Law Program which pairs law students with a class of students in a local high school to teach them about our legal system. Meghan was a board member for the Alternative Dispute Resolution team, and she served as a student attorney in the Education Rights Clinic and Mediation Clinic. Upon graduation, she took the Texas Uniform Bar Exam and joined Walsh Gallegos in the Fall of 2023.
